NINGPO. February 5th.

Yesterday, the interesting (to Chinese) ceremony of " beating the bull" was observed by the nutives with due solemnity. To the un initiated I will explain what this means. The image of a bull made of bamboo and clay is prepared and placed in one of the temples, and on the Chinese Spring Solatice festival-4th February this year,—the officials repair to this temple and pray to certain joss, and to a young boy who represents the joss of the cowherds. When this has been done, the officials armed with wands form a circle round the image of the bull, and each touches it lightly with wand. At a given signal, the leader rushes into the temple: the growd numbering between 4,000 and 5,000 people, as was the case yester. day, immediately set about demolishing the nil and in order that every one may obtain a picce of it, they push and bustle each other about, and blackened eyes and bleeding noses become the property of the most adventurous ones. The pieces of clay are taken home by the fortunate possessors, who deposit them on their monure beans, as it is thought that a plentiful crop will result from their doing so. This image of the bull is painted various colors. and the preponderance of any particular color among Japanese in Osaka. Play was officially is arranged by a blind man at Peking. During their stay on this to an immediate discount of 20 %. inhospitable coast these Dutch mariners with nessed a singular phenomenon, the cause of which has remained unknown up to this day. On the 4th of November the sun had quitted | Share in the Bonus to be declared on 31st | HENNESSY'S BRANDY the horizon, as it was expected to do, and the December for the quinquennial period then AMERICAN BACON. night was, in due course, to last until the 8th of ending. February. Instead of this, the sun reappeared on the 24th of January, a date which our authorcorrects from calculation, and tinds to have been the 25th. In short, daylight came on a fortnight earlier than was expected; On their return to Helland this piece of news they brought was received with universal incredulity. but Barentz adduced an argument in support, which was decisive. It was this:—On that memorable 24th of January he had, at 6 o'clock a.m. observed a conjunction of the moon and Jupiter. Now this astronomical ovent was marked on the ephemerides of Venice for that day at one o'clock after midnight. This settled the question, and the only difficulty now remained, how to explain the premature return of the sun. The phenomenon was attributed to the great polar, on any Building, or on Merchandise in the same, cold, and it was admitted that the refraction of at the usual rates, subject to a discount of the atmosphere cold, in certain cases, amount to 41 deg. A long time after, about 1780, Lemon. nier took up the matter, and found an error in the longitude, which Barentz seemed to have inistaken, and it might, therefore, be doubted whether he saw the conjunction at all. M. Baille has endeavoured to elucidate this point by taking up all the calculations again from the CAPITAL AND SURPLUS 800,000 TAELS beginning. He arrives at the conclusion that Barentz certainly committed an orror, but not that attributed to him by Lemonnier, whose calculation was wrong ; that Barentz, nevertheless, could have seen Inpiter in a line with the provide out of the earnings, first for an interest horns of the moon, and that the premature dividend of 15% for shareholders on Capital, appearance of the sun was caused by reflection, and thereafter distribute among Policy holders similar to that which produces the rainbow.

The scene of the accident was the schoolhouse of the village of Helliken, containing about 700 inhabitants, and one of the many villages in the fruitful valley of the Frickthal in the parish of Wogstetten, district of pared to GRANT INSURANCES at Current Rheinfelden, near the Swiss salt pits. It has I always been the custon in most of the Swiss villages to collect subscriptions amongst the well-to-do inhabitants for distribution amongs! the school-children as Christmas gifts. Everything had been prepared on this occasion in the usual way, and the children had assembled a six o'clock in the evening of Obrietmas Day, outside the school-house, in the company of their friends and parents, waiting impatiently for admittance to see the Christmas tree in Olass Steamers and Sailing Ships. order that they might receive their several gifts. At a little after six o'clock the schoolmaster commenced lighting the Christmas tree. Having accomplished this, he opened the doors, when the crowd waiting outside rushed in one dense mass up the staircase leading to the room prepared upstairs for their reception. On their reaching the top of the second staircase the TOOLICIES granted at current rates on Mabeams supporting the flooring suddenly gave rine Risks to all parts of the World. It was nearly seven o'clook when this occurred and everything was in darkness, when the remaining population of the village, hearing the cries of the unfortunate children and their friends, hurried to the spot, some of them subsequently running off for assistance to the neighbouring villages of Zuegen and Wagstetten, the women and children of which were assembled for a similar purpose in their respective village school-bouses. They set to work busily to clear the interior as soon as assistance arrived, extracting from the debrie kow and are prepared to grant Insurances at Current Rates. 72 corpses-those of 56 children, 14 mothers of families, and two men-besides about 40 injured persons and children, some of them very seriously hurt. EXTRACTS FROM THE MARQUIS OF first poetic venture. It is a love story in times; and there were few among them who heroic verse, such as was used by Pope and were capable of understanding the merits of Dryden, and the scene is laid on the fringe Michel Angelo, or of awarding his genius its cooled, the vapour condensed, settled down of shore lying between mountains and sea meed of praise. It is altogether to be reupon the Gulf of Genoa-the period the gretted that he fell into the hands of the tenth century. The father and son are thus introduced to the reader .-SON AND SIRE. "Now, on the road that leads from out the town." Appear two knights who slowly wend them down, Till reached the ground where still the meu-at-arms Practise the miniery of war's alarma. But when among them wave the chief's gay plumes, Each, in the ordered line, his place assumes: And waits, with studied gaze, and lowered brand; Till every weapon in each rank is scanned. "The clder knight, whose fierce and haughty mion In his firm stride and on his brow was seen, Was grizzled, swarthy, and his forehead worn By scars of fight and time, not lightly borne; For the dimmed eye that gazed, deep-sunk, beacath, Showed that the spirit's blade had worn its sheath; And that full soon the years must have an end.

In which, on friend or foc, that plance should bend. The younger man, who followed at his side, Bore the same impress of a lofty pride. But all his bearing lacked the rigid mould That in the elder of tough metal told! Thus, as the sire, with patient care, surveys How every movement its trained skill displays: The son but sanuters beedlessly along, His lips just narmuring as they shape a song. His large grey eye was restless as the thought That fixed no purpose in the mind it sought. One jewelled hand was on his dagger laid, With pointed leard the other often played, Or swept from neck and shoulder curls that, fing

"Then came Into the ruddy light of her hearth's flame. So that it blozoned her young beauty forth, And seemed to love with all its charms to play, The fisher's daughter, the pride of cape and bay. Whose leveliness, not such as in the North Blushes like smedine through the morning mist, Was that of Southern eve, quick darkening, kinsed By crimson lightnings of her burning day, naid whose arching brow-and glancing eves

Told of passing, timorous surprise; Whose tresses half concealed a neck that raised A head that classic art might well have praised. Framed with the hair, in glossy masses thrown From forehead whiter than Carrara's stone, Her race's lineaments, clear cut and straight, Might show that sternness lived her nature's mate. Did not the smile that over them would steal Another mood, as favourite, reveal; Else had not dimples on the sunburned cheek Helped the eye's merriment so oft to speak. O'er beauteons mouth and rounded chin there stayed Strength's haughty sign that power and will betrayed; But broken by a gentleness of soul That through her alledfast gaze in softness stole. Her form was strong and lithe. She came and made

A slight obciennce, as though half afraid; Then stood—a coarse robe flowing to her feet, Each limb round shadowed in the fitful heat. And, like the glow that lighted her, there sped Through Guido's frame a pulse that quickly fled, But left his breathless gaze to feed upon The figure that, to him, like angel's shore " Guido falls in love with her at first sight; and his admiration is so marked that the old man rallies him about it :---"Ah I who can tell if noblest impulse lies Within the magic of the meeting eyes, Or if the ruin of a life be where

The light falls softest on some golden bair?" The dawn of Lita's love for the Count's son, her joys and fears, her efforts to sun press her joy, and the increasing strength of her attachment, are told:--

LITA AT HOME. And thus he entered, with a heart that beat. The house wherein again her busy feet Moved, as it seemed to him, in music sweet. And as he sat, and watched how order grew Beneath her fingers, as they deftly drow Her tasks to end; her every look and word His massion decreated, and his wonder stirred. How could such blossom grow on salted soil, Such bloom and beauty from a race of toil,

Such grace and colour near the deadening spray?" The lovers converse togther, and Lita describes to him with artless grace her way LITA'S OCCUPATIONS. "But 'tis not from your nets,' he said, 'aloue You get your living, for you surely own. Those trees that far around the sunlight break? No, no, she answered; 'tis but ours to shake. Their laden branches with the tapering cane And cause the clives' fall of fruitful rain ! To gather them in baskets till they fill The dusty flooring of the busy mill. But in a little garden, all mine own, Some beauteous palms, beloved of God, have grown, And of their drooping fringes I may keep Some here, to grace the day of those who sleep In martyrs' graves beyond the echoing deep: Some for their place of martyrdom, I sell To those, they say, who near their ashes dwell. He, asking where this Eden garden lay? Watched her fair figure outlined gainst the day That, through the open window near him, shone And let her eager speech, unchecked, flow on, As with her lifted hand, she pointed where A palm-tree shot aloft to woo the glare;

Then showed each shot in narrow circuit round.

Where traces of her simple life were found."

The main incidents of the story follow, and the past relates how the Saracons, and vale of Enna; how Guido fits out a squadron to attack the Moors; how Lita escapes the stronghold of Sirad is worth giving :--

LITA SLEEPING. "She slept, or was it but a dreadful twoon. That made her lie so still at first?-but soon If it were such, it passed into a sleep; With breathings low, and regular, and deep ; And o'er the features drawn by antious pain A blessed contentment now began to reign. But the people of after ages, with their hero-worship, are fond of deceiving themselves, and forget facts in order that the image their admiration has created may not be deficed or diminished. To this manner it was for a long time asserted that Michel Angelo never took flight from Florence in fear; but a letter written by his own hand, and removing every doubt, has now been recovered and given to the world. The original letter, sent from Venice to his friend Battista della Palla, is preserved in the Buonarrotti archives. It is as follows :-"To BATTISTA. MY VERY DEAR FRIEND. I left there, as I suppose you know, intending to go to France. On arriving at Venice, and difficult travelling.
